SECTION: A

READING COMPREHENSION.

1. Read the story below and answer questions (a) to (d)

Dressed casually like any other town dweller, the young man walked along the street among other ordinary citizens. Suddenly, I heard some screaming and turned around to see a smartly-dressed lady running after someone. It happened as fast as lightning. The lady had been robbed of her handbag. The thief was the young man I had seen earlier. He had taken a different lane and was speeding with all his might.

I immediately joined a mob of chasers who were in hot pursuit of the thief. The chase took us through an open field and into a building under construction. He came upon a high wall which challenged his plan of escape. He threw the handbag over to the other side and quickly began to climb the wall. How unlucky he was! He tripped at last and landed with a thud. He lay down there helplessly looking at the approaching mob which was breathing fire. The furious mob descended on him mercilessly amid his attempt to seek for forgiveness. In the split of a second, he was bleeding heavily and no sound came out of his mouth.

Two policemen on patrol intervened after they heard the fracas. The angry mob was dispersed though after a shot in the air. The thief was arrested and the lady recovered her handbag. One of the policemen informed the mob against taking the law into their hands. He explained the importance of respecting life and the right to a fair trial in a court of law.

(a) Why do you think the young man could not be suspected to be a thief?(1mk)

8.	In this section, answer all the following questions
	One sunny afternoon, a thirsty fox was looking for a well to quench himself. He found one but it was too de	eep. He craned his neck to try his luck but accidentally fell into the well. He tried with all his effort to nt but in vain. He remained in there helplessly. Meanwhile, a goat passed by the well and peeped
	e. He saw the fox.
	"What are you doing there, Mr. Fox?" asked concerned goat.
	"I am enjoying the finest water in the whole world. Jump in and take a drink," said the fox.
	The goat did not hesitate but jumped into the well. He drank to his satisfaction but just like the fox, he go	t stranded on how to get out.
	The fox finally suggested, "I have an idea. Why don't you stand on your back legs, I climb on your back	and then to your head and get out of the well. From there, I will easily help you."
	The goat agreed and did as the fox said. Once the fox was out of the well, he minded his own busin	ess and walked away saying, "Next time, poor goat, use your brain."

9 Read the poem below and then answer the questions that follow

Whose woods these are I think I know. His house is in the village though; He will not see me stopping here, To watch his woods fill up with snow.

My little horse must think it queer To stop without a farmhouse near Between the woods and frozen lake The darkest evening of the year.

He gives his harness bell a snake To ask if there is some mistake The only other sound's the sweep Of easy wind and downy flake

The woods are lovely, dark and deep But I have promises to keep And miles to go before I sleep And miles to go before I sleep.

There was something wrong with Wanjala. He wore a sad face as he limped into the sitting room. His shirt was ripped. His loud footsteps caught his mother's attention while she was watching the news on television. She exclaimed the moment her gaze fell on him.

What has happed to my son? She wondered.

Wanjala was unable to control his emotions. He shook his head, tears streaming down his cheeks. His mother turned off the television and approached him. She gave him a pat on the back.

"What happened to you, son? Place your backpack on the table, then go to your room and change. I am waiting for you so that you can tell me what is bothering you," his mother said.

He nodded and limped to his room. He sat on his bed, stared blankly at the ceiling while in deep thought.
